

Tupelo and Lee County boasts a nationally recognized school system and proximity to several institutions of higher learning. In Lee County, 98% of all school-age children attend public schools.

Lee County Schools

The Lee County School District consists of thirteen schools and a center for academic improvement serving K-12. Campuses are located in Belden, Guntown, Mooreville, Plantersville, Saltillo, Shannon, and Verona. Over 7,100 students are currently enrolled in all programs offered throughout the district.

The district also implements a School-to-Careers curriculum, helping its students become more aware of career choices and the skills they will need. For more information, visit leecountyschools.us.

Tupelo Public School District

The Tupelo Public School District (TPSD) ranks 16th out of 147 districts in our state, boasting a graduation rate of over 88%. Currently there are over 6,900 students enrolled in all programs. TPSD provides a superior educational path phasing in the new MS College & Career Readiness standards in grades Pre-K through 12th. On campus there are 11 different languages spoken by members of our student body.

TPSD offers 22 advanced placement courses, and has one-to-one devices for students from 2nd-12th grade. With more than 500 interactive boards in the schools, the students and staff are embracing cutting edge technology daily. For more information, visit tupeloschools.com.

Since 2009, all Tupelo and Lee County graduates receive two full years of tuition-free assistance to attend Itawamba Community College.

In Lee County, 96% of all school-age children attend public schools.

Rev. 4.2019